CHRISTEN BABY AT YOSEMITE FALLS

Yosemite, Cal., Aug. 15.—Under the curling white crest of the world famous Vernal Falls, of Yosemite national park, where the waters drop sheer over a granite cliff 250 feet, the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Foster Curry was christened Katherine Cherry Curry by Rev. George Maxwell of the Episcopal church of Sasulito, Cal., at sunset yesterday.

As the clergyman sprayed water from dripping mosses at the conclusion of the rite the setting sun shining through the falls formed a rainbow arch above the heads of the party.

CHINAMAN MAY BE DEPORTED TO CHINA

Yesterday Deputy United States Marshal Lucian Smyth took Lee Ling Chung, a Chinaman of this city, to Salt Lake, after he had been arrested at the instance of immigration and Chinese Inspector D. A. Plumly for not having a certificate permitting him to land in this country.

Lee will be given a hearing before a United States commissioner in the near future to determine whether he is an importer in the United States. He declares that a certificate of admission has been issued to him, but that it is in the possession of his brother who lives in the east. An opportunity will be given him to produce his certificate before deporting him, but he will be returned to China if he fails to do so.

ENGINEERS ARE WORKING ON NEW LINE

The Utah Power & Light company has two crews of engineers at work in the vicinity of Ogden, surveying for new transmission lines. There are about 20 men on the work, all making headquarters in Ogden, and they are conveyed to their work each day by heavy rigs.

The company is building a branch distributing system from the main steel tower line, leading from Ogden to Salt Lake, to Devil's Slide, the purpose being to supply the cement plant at that place with electric power which it has heretofore been generating with its own dynamo. The surveyors are now marking out the line from Utah station, at the mouth of Weber canyon, to the Slide. It is planned to be an ordinary single wooden pole line and will follow the course of the Weber river. The current for this line will be supplied from the main line of 45,000 volts which is conducted over the steel tower line.

The other work by the engineers is on a proposed transmission steel tower line from Grace, Idaho, to Ogden and Salt Lake. This line will extend direct from Grace, following closely the Bear river channel into Box Elder county and from there hugging closely the settlements near the base of the mountains. The line will pass close to the Amalgamated Sugar factory in West Ogden and will go through the larger settlements of Davis county. Some of the steel for the towers have been shipped near the sugar factory and other shipments have been forwarded to points between Ogden and Grace.

Not only will the engineers designate the route for the steel tower line but make exact measurements for the concrete bases for the towers and monuments.

The present tower line of the company carries a voltage of about 45,000 but the new line will carry a current of 110,000 volts from Grace, Idaho, which is on the Bear river. It is said to have cost the Telluride Power and Transmission line, a quarter of a million dollars to construct the steel tower transmission line, now owned by the Utah Power & Light company, from the mouth of the North Ogden canyon to Salt Lake. That being true, it will cost nearly a million dollars to build a similar tower line from the Idaho town.

W. A. JAMES POINTS OUT SOME ERRORS

Retailer Does Not Make the Profit He Is Said to Receive — Margin on Meats Is Not Large — Figures on Chickens Are Wrong — Local Business Man Is Not Opposed to Parcels Post and Advocates Its Use

Editor Standard: May I again have some space to reply to Postmaster Cutler's article in Wednesday's issue?

My motive is simply to make plain my contention that the retailers are not robbers, as some people are led to believe, but are a necessity to modern civilization. They have their part to play.

I hope that no one will think I am knocking parcels post. I have always been in favor of it, but I have always contended that it will not effect the business of the retailer. The retailer is far too important for the good of the community. Can you imagine living in a city where there were no retailers, and had to depend exclusively on parcels post to get all of your supplies? That is ONE of the great advantages of living in a city.

Parcels post was primarily for the benefit of farmers, not to get things to the city people but to get things to the country, a cheaper means for transporting small articles to the farmer.

I hope I am not making a personal attack against Mr. Cutler, but he says some things that are unfair, to say the least, in quoting his prices. Without exception they were all wrong on articles that amount to anything, both in his first article and the last one.

I showed conclusively in my other article where nothing was saved to the community on chickens, butter or eggs, by buying direct. In other words, the retailer can distribute cheaper than parcel post; but I overlooked one point, that was a mistake Mr. Cutler made in figuring the very first thing he quoted, viz: a 3 pound chicken at 15c should be 54c. Mr. Cutler figured it 44 cents, so that the merchant actually saves the consumer 8 cents on the lot. This is not a mere statement of mine, Get the other articles and see for yourself.

Now I don't think for a minute that Mr. Cutler is putting out these figures to deceive anyone, but I think he is simply mistaken in his ideas. In his last article he says, "Is it business for a farmer to sell his veal to a commission house for 10c or 11c per pound and buy it back for 25c or 30c? Now he ought to know that we pay 13c to 13 1/2c for veal and that there is only about 20 pounds in the whole veal that we get 25c and 30c a pound. The balance ranges from 5c to 20c. And does he think we can cut up a veal without any waste or that it takes no time to do the cutting? We will sell anyone a side of veal at a cent a pound profit.

Again he says, "Is it business for a farmer to sell his pork for 7c or 8c a pound and buy back the hams and bacon from 22c to 30c." There he is off again. We are paying 11c to 12c a pound for hogs now and there is not enough coming in to supply the demand. Does he know that the hams and bacon are the highest priced part of the pork and that the balance ranges all the way down to about 3 cents per pound for the feet, and that there is quite a lot of waste that does not bring anything?

Again he says, "Does it pay the farmer to send his children to the neighboring town to sell his garden stuff when he can get 100 per cent more by selling direct to the consumer?" Ah! there is just the point. The farmer is getting the benefit, not the consumer.

Now, if the farmer sells his stuff direct, he gets more for it than if he sold to a dealer, and he is entitled to more. It costs him more to sell it. In other words he is a retailer, must get paid for his trouble of distributing and there is where he fails, he cannot possibly compete with the retailer who devotes his whole time to studying out the best means of distribution.

The retailer is one of the important links in modern life and, instead of living off the community, is saving the consumer some money.

The farmer will save too, because he can employ his time to better advantage, producing the stuff and selling larger quantities than by spending his time preparing single packages for delivery.

I desire to thank the Standard for space to let the people hear both sides.

I believe if people understood better there would be less antagonism to the retailer and he would be appreciated at his true worth.

WORLD'S MARKETS

WALL STREET.

New York, Aug. 15.—The apathy of today's stock market afforded a striking contrast to recent days, when dealings were large and broad on a rising tendency. Trading in the first hour was perfunctory, the ticker frequently coming to a halt and before noon conditions were utterly stagnant.

Advances were restricted to minor railways and specialties including Harvester preferred, Virginia Iron and Lorraine Tobacco, the latter rising 7 points.

Bonds were steady. Some substantial declines were recorded in the opening dealings on the stock exchange today. Canadian Pacific lost over a point, with marked heaviness in Reading, Steel and Amalgamated Copper. The list as a whole manifested a drooping tendency.

From its dull opening, the market fell into a state of absolute inertia in which price quotations were so limited as to rob them of any significance.

Only limited amounts of stocks were offered at the lower levels and when some inquiry arose later, prices moved up easily to where they left off yesterday. Westinghouse Electric issues were bid up smartly, the common rising 3 3/4 and the preferred 5 points.

Union Pacific led another movement in the later dealings, soon being active by Reading, Steel and other joined issues, most of which were then at the day's low level. There was a slight increase of activity, but at the expense of quoted values little

DIGGS CASE NEAR END

Yesterday's Afternoon Session.

Lola Norris followed Marsha Warrington on the witness stand yesterday afternoon and repeated virtually unchanged, but in even stronger terms, the story of seduction, intimidation and elopement from Sacramento to Reno on which the government bases its prosecution of Maury I. Diggs and Drew Caminetti under the Mann act, which forbids the transportation of women for immoral purposes from one state to another. The trial of Caminetti will follow that of Diggs now in progress.

The day was punctuated by a series of sharp minor surprises. Juror Bill Shoup, a disposition to question the good faith of the government in withholding some evidence and a transcript of the story told by Marsha Warrington to the assistant district attorney of Sacramento county on the way home from Reno after the arrests, which is now in the possession of the prosecution. He was instructed by the court that the jury would take cognizance of nothing except what came regularly before it.

Admonishes the Jury. Curiosity as to his state of mind increased when, after a minute adjournment, he was 15 minutes late, but Judge Van Fleet accepted suavely his statement that he had misunderstood the instructions as when to return.

In dismissing the jury last night, the court repeated the usual caution and at the same time explained the particularly emphatic admonitions he gave yesterday.

"I don't want to be understood," said the judge, "as having implied yesterday that there was any well founded suspicion as to the integrity of the jury. The suggestion I had in mind came from one of my own attendants, but it did not mean that anyone knew anything of a sinister nature of anyone on this jury. It would suggest that one looking like a member of this jury had been seen talking with someone connected with the defense of this case."

Earlier in the day the court commented sharply on the presence of women.

Young Women in Court. "I see some very young women in the rear of the court room," said the judge. "Are they accompanied by their mothers or chaperones?" One of the girls spoke up and said they were.

"If that's the case," said the judge, "then the responsibility is on them and not on the court."

In the morning session Marsha Warrington concluded her testimony on cross-examination when Judge Van Fleet cut short the questions of Nathan Coghlan for the defense, with a curt statement that they were eliciting nothing new nor material to the case. The re-direct and re-cross-examinations were so summary as to be almost nominal.

On her third day of testifying Miss Warrington strengthened rather than weakened her first direct narrative. She showed herself to be not only a positive but a quick witted witness and took advantage of every opportunity to discomfit the attack made on her.

Lola Norris a Better Witness. When her memory failed her as to the questions asked after answered on the way back from Reno, she was prompt to emphasize her motive in submitting to questions whatsoever.

"To shield Mr. Diggs," she explained. And when she admitted that she had talked with counsel for the government about the testimony she was to give, her account of her instructions was this: "To tell the truth."

Contrary to expectation, Lola Norris, who followed her, was the more outspoken and forward witness of the two. She was never at a loss for an answer; her replies were distinct, specific and full, given with her eyes on the interrogator.

In all the essentials her narrative was the same as that of Marsha Warrington, but richer in detail. She reaffirmed that the elopement to Reno was only brought to pass by threats of exposure if they remained in Sacramento, that marriage had been promised before and after their flight; and that Diggs bought the tickets.

"My mother couldn't stand the shock," she testified she had objected to the arguments of Diggs. "It always takes bullets to kill." Diggs had replied, "I guess she'll get over it all right."

Had Been a Pure Girl. He said we should all be absolutely ruined if we stayed in Sacramento," she continued. "He told us that everyone would scorn us, that every one of our friends would leave us and we would be pointed out as the two girls who had been connected with them in an affair. Finally we agreed to go."

Before she met Caminetti, she had been a pure girl, she testified, and not until the last night of their three days in Reno had she yielded to him, Caminetti, she swore, was aware of the truth of this and even admitted it to her. He had reiterated his promise of marriage.

The girl finished her painful story late in the afternoon. In the twenty minutes that remained for cross-examination she contradicted no particle of it. Her relief when she stepped down from the stand was visible and she smiled as her father stepped forward to put an arm around her and shielded her face from the photographers who flocked about the doorway of the Federal building.

The dread of pictures for cross-examination she contradicted no particle of it.
